Starting from Karachi where we have water parks, shopping, beaches, zoos, horseback riding whereas in Lahore water parks, zoos, architecture, history and culture is the main attraction moving further to Murree those green Mountain peaks will actually give you a thrill and a calm enjoyable environment. Places like Naran Kaghan, Siri Paya, Gilgit Baltistan, Bhurban, Kalam, Swat, Taxila, Margalla Hills, KPK (Khyber Pakhtunkhwa), Gwadar, Balakot, Jhelum, Skardu and many places like these which has beautiful views of lakes, rivers, mountains, snowfall and greenery will actually bring a heavenly and adventurous sensation to you while travelling.
- * Let's take a tour of those facts or you can say the brighter part of our Country. Skimming over a few selective spheres of influence where Pakistan has truly blazed a trail.

1. Technology:

The level of technology in the computer connectivity and telecom sectors has, in many cases, been equivalent to or better than even the most industrialized nations of the world. As an example the first WiMax rolled out in the world was in Pakistan.

2. Largest Ambulance Service:

Other than the impressive list of large NGOs and charities currently operating in the country, the Edhi Trust runs the largest ambulance network in the world and is completely free; it is run entirely on donations. Given the per capita income of the people of Pakistan, this is no small achievement.

3. World class Educational Institutions:

Pakistan is now home to some of the finest universities like The Aga Khan University, Lahore University of Management Sciences, National University of Science and Technology, FAST, Indus Valley School of Art and Architecture and so on are those newly established universities that have joined the ranks of older Pakistani educational institutions such as Dow, King Edward College of Medicine etc.

4. Submarine Production:

Pakistan has always been a shipbuilding country but has now started manufacturing submarines as well.

5. Land of the Music Legends:

Most of South Asia's master musicians in every genre are produced in Pakistan whether it is the world famous qawwali of Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan, the ghazals of Iqbal Bano or Farida Khanum. Mehdi Hassan, pioneers of pop music in the sub-continent such as Nazia and Zoheb Hassan or bands such as Junoon, Fuzon and Atif Aslam, it seems the only music produced in South Asia comes from Pakistan.

Shazia, 25, who hails from Vehari District in Punjab, joined the Rescue 1122 emergency services as a firefighter in 2010. Battling fire with terrifying blazes in a field dreaded even by most men, her collaborators recognize her determination. Rescue 1122 states that Perveen is the first female firefighter in Pakistan, and maybe in all of Asia.

For Perveen, in any case, the employment has dependably been a fantasy in spite of its intrinsic risks. So when the Rescue 1122 Women's Department opened up, she seized the possibility. The possibility of working alongside men too did not stage her energy.

“A few ladies maintain a strategic distance from and waver to work with men. That is the place I vary with them and surmise that we, ladies, can work shoulder-to-shoulder with men,” says Perveen.

In any case, it has not been a simple street to her fantasy. After enlistment, she needed to experience broad preparing at the Punjab Emergency Service in Lahore. “Amongst the 600 individuals there, I was the main lady who finished the preparation.” Her preparation included figuring out how to swim, bounce, battle fire, and moving up rooftops with the assistance of ropes.

She relates how countless left their preparation in center on the grounds that they couldn't take it any longer. In any case, she drove forward, and even wound up motivating some of her kindred male learners to continue going. However, what kept her going?

“I was told amid the preparation that I would turn into the first woman firefighter of Asia, which made me to a great degree glad and it was a dream come true.” describes Perveen. An undeniable firefighter, Perveen assists firefighters where ladies are caught.

“At the start, individuals would snicker at me when they saw me working with male laborers. In any case, a short time later, when I spared their valuable properties amid flames, they began appreciating me,” she describes.

Having figured out how to wriggle into a universe of men, Perveen conceives that that ladies can handle any occupation and take up any calling of their decision. Commending Shazia's energy, District Emergency Officer Doctor Farzand says Perveen is a dependable laborer and we get the opportunity to get great criticism for her, which is on account of she never bargains on her work.

“Our own is a men's general public. In any case, Perveen lives up to expectations stubbornly against such matriarchal considering,” he says. “It is accepted that ladies are just ready to begin fires, while I have refuted this old saying and now I quench flames,” says Perveen

Iqbal Masih: The Unsung Hero of Pakistan

By:
Fareeha Jabir
BS433817

Iqbal Masih was born to a provincial family only outside of Lahore in 1983. He was sold into labor at an early age to a neighborhood boss who claimed a floor covering weaving business. His dad had obtained cash from the boss for wedding of Iqbal's sibling and to reimburse the advance, Iqbal needed to act as a fortified work.

He worked day by day for 12 hours, 7 days a week. After that he figured out how to escape when he was ten. However he was caught and brought by the police (no other) to his local spot. At that point, he was sent again to the rug weaver.

He got away again and this time he joined Bonded Labor Liberation Front of Pakistan.

He worked with them to free the youngsters like him-self and was fruitful in liberating around 3000 kids. He was shot dead in 1995 when he was just 11 years of age.

His passing remains a debate as some case he was shot dead via floor covering weaving mafia while others say he was shot dead by a rancher.

Nonetheless, his legacy lives on, and United States Department of Labor has a yearly grant in his honor:

The Iqbal Masih Award.

Unfortunately in his nation of origin he is not really known! Let's value the solid small being who accomplished more great in his short life than the greater part of us have ever done. Hats off to you, legend!

Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif invited by President Obama for US visit

By Abdullah Sheikh
BS43 3808

Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif has been invited by US President Barack Obama for a visit to the United States, a senior Pakistani diplomat said on Wednesday.

The dates for the visit are still being worked out, but the diplomat said the visit was expected to take place towards the end of October.

It will be separate from the New York visit in September for attending the UN General Assembly session. On the margins of the UN General Assembly session, Mr. Sharif will also co-chair a summit on peacekeeping with Mr. Obama.

The White House invitation has not yet been officially announced.

This will be Mr. Sharif's second visit to the White House during his current tenure. He last visited the US in October 2013. The visit helped reset ties that had been weighed down by events of the preceding years. The invitation for this year, the diplomat said, was meant to expand and deepen the relationship.

Another Pakistani diplomat speaking by phone from Washington said that the other purpose of the White House invitation was to boost Mr. Sharif's government which is seemingly under growing pressure from the military, particularly with respect to its India policy.

Others say developments in the region were also behind the invitation. Mr. Sharif's foreign policy aides have been particularly upbeat about the invitation and one of them said that it would take the strategic partnership to the next level.

The US government has expressed support for the Sharif government's policy on reaching out to India. The on-going operations against terrorists and Pakistan's role in Afghan peace dialogue have also been appreciated. Before Eid, Mr. Sharif had dispatched his Special Assistant Tariq Fatemi to the US to prepare for his upcoming visit.

During his stay in Washington, Mr. Fatemi met senior officials of the Obama administration and Congress leaders. He will also be speaking at think-tanks

Qatar Airways launches services in two more Pakistani cities

By Nimra Arshad
BS403541

Qatar Airways announced that it has launched services in two more cities of Pakistan namely Sialkot and Faisalabad on consecutive days.

The airline started four weekly passenger services to Sialkot on July 16 and a day later announced that it would also commence three weekly flights to Faisalabad.

Qatar Airways Cargo had already been operating a direct freight service to Sialkot since 2008 because of the high volume of products, especially textiles, being exported from the city.

Further, the airline has announced that in a few weeks Multan will also join its Pakistan network with three flights a week starting from August 2. Qatar Airways already has Karachi, Lahore, Islamabad, and Peshawar on its list of destinations.

On the two new destinations, Sialkot and Faisalabad, the airline has decided to operate an Airbus A320 in a two-class configuration of up to 12 seats in Business Class and up to 132 in Economy Class.

Qatar Airways currently flies 45 times a week to four cities of Pakistan, with double daily flights to Karachi, Lahore and Islamabad, and three weekly flights to Peshawar. Karachi was the first city in Pakistan where the airline launched its services in 1995, followed by Peshawar in 1998, Lahore in 1999 and Islamabad in 2004.
